

Did you know.....

That our Scientific Computing Department take part in the Great British Birdwatch each year? Run by the RSPB and the British Trust for Ornithology every year, they ask the public to count numbers and species of birds that visit their garden in one hour. The data is held on the STFC JASMIN computer and scientists use it to research the changes in the UK bird populations. The computer is so powerful that it can process the data in hours rather than the weeks it would take on a normal desktop computer.
